Learning a foreign language is compulsory throughout Germany in secondary schools and English is one of the more popular choices. Students at certain Gymnasium are required to learn Latin as their first foreign language and choose a second foreign language.

English is the language of our international communication in all areas, such as politics, science, media or art and it is often the language of entertainment as well as socialising. Having a good command of English helps us to have more opportunities in life, first of all, our career.

English language plays an essential role in our lives as it helps in communication. It is the main language for studying any subject all over the world. English is important for students as it broadens their minds, develops emotional skills, improve the quality of life by providing job opportunities.

Germany's biggest cities, Berlin, Frankfurt, Cologne, and Hamburg are home to a mix of multilingual residents. Here are the most spoken languages in Germany: English. English is the official language of business in Germany, with 56% of the population speaking it. Both English and German belong to the Germanic language family, which encompasses languages spoken primarily in Northern Europe. They trace their linguistic roots back to Proto-Germanic, a common ancestor that existed over a thousand years ago. The German-speaking countries are often referred to as the DACH region, which stands for Germany (D), Austria (A), and Switzerland (CH from Confoederatio Helvetica, the Latin name for Switzerland) It is also established as the official business language of larger German companies. Beyond the legally established status, it is used in numerous formal or informal international contact situations.

The two languages use the same alphabet

One of the most obvious similarities between German and English is the fact that both languages utilise the same 26 letters which form the Latin alphabet. This is a major plus point, as it makes it easy for English speakers to start writing in the German language straight away.

For German speakers specifically English is easier to learn than say Chinese or Arabic or Russian. But it's still not easy for German speakers to learn English. Anytime anyone learns another language it will always require effort and hard work. The official language of Germany is German, with over 95 percent of the country speaking Standard German or a dialect of German as their first language. This figure includes speakers of Northern Low Saxon, a recognized minority or regional language that is not considered separately from Standard German in statistics.

Conclusion

In general, British English is taught in German schools. However in higher grades, both British English and American English is taught. Sometimes, teachers also point out the differences in grammar.
